“ We have so many wonderful memories of Doris and John. Having lived across the street from them for more than 20 years, we still think of both of them and Barbara together; their house will always be the Britt home to us. We always enjoyed talking to them, and spoke of them as bright, interesting, and caring people and the anchor of the neighborhood. They were always thoughtful and aware of others. I will always remember the day I saw Doris waving her arms as I pulled out of our driveway, a clear signal to alert me to a child who was about to cross in front of my car. Doris often mentioned how she enjoyed the cornbread from the Boston Market that our daughter, Kysa, liked to bring home for them when she worked there in high school. Kysa was glad to be home from grad school in Los Angeles during Thanksgiving two years ago, and was able to attend the funeral for John. Our other daughter Cara, enjoyed sending them postcards from Italy when she was studying for her Master's Degree. We will always cherish our memories of Doris, John, and Barbara, their devotion to each other, and the friendship they offered our neighborhood.##imported-begin##Kathy Christie##imported-end##
