“ To the entire Worshoufsky family I extend my condolences. Most of my time with Irv was back stage, under cars, or late nights under the street lights enjoying a beer and a little Metaxa. This morning the stage opens and the lights shine bright in the back round celebrating his life as the front of the stage fades to a modest blue from the sadness of his departure. Who will make the calls from the booth? Who will preset the board? Who will set the spots? Who will make the jokes at the most serious of times? The rehearsals are over, the final show has played, the stage lights dim as the "IRV" takes his final bow. A man who never wanted to be in the spot light. Before the final curtain, on this day, as he takes center stage the spots shine all at once. All on him. The stage is yours my friend. Bow and be proud of all your accomplishments. You touched the lives of all you came in contact with. The spots go dark, the curtain falls, and the house fades to black as the show comes to an end. The marquis reads "Today we lost a great one." My thoughts and prayers are with you all.
