“ Jack and Jean came to visit us in Maine and we asked them if they would like to go to an auction with us. Jack asked where it was and we told him not far- just down the road a bit. Apparently "not far" in West Hartford means something different than it does in Maine. Jack complained all the way there about how long it was taking and hoping it would be worth it. He was looking for some good antiques. The auction turned out to be in a big old "smelly" barn with wooden benches, First they brought out livestock to auction off and progressed to everything from boxes of baseball hats to boxes of dog leashes. Jack's reaction was hilarious and he never let us forget it.
